

From the reviews for The Cambridge Companion to Darwin (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2003; 2nd edition 2009)

“[A]n excellent collection” that is “not just informative and stimulating but provocative as well” – Australasian Journal of Philosophy

“[L]ives up to its title” in being “exemplary at synthesizing a host of resources and positions” while “offering some truly remarkable insights of its own,” with Radick’s chapter as “perhaps the most remarkable and promising piece in the collection” – Annals of Science

“[A] volume we should celebrate” – Biology and Philosophy

“I have rarely seen a multiauthored book that shows so much thoughtful integration and balance, and that unites quite distinct views into a truly complementary whole. My compliments to the editors.” – Plant Systematics and Evolution

“It would be hard to imagine a much more effective or authoritative ‘companion to Darwin’” – Bookends
